AN ANDREW YOUNG SCHOOL DIALOGUE ON GLOBAL POLICY

with The Honorable
Jimmy Carter and
The Honorable
Andrew Young

Carter receives the Andrew Young Medal for Capitalism and Social Progress

Former United States President Jimmy Carter (1977-1981) and his friend and former ambassador to the United Nations, Andrew Young, met to discuss global policy from the Carter Administration to the present at a symposium hosted by the school. "A World View: From Plains to the Planet," was moderated by Dean Roy Bahl. During the event, AYSPS Advisory Board Chair Paul Rosser and Board Member Carolyn Young awarded Carter the school's Andrew Young Medal for Capitalism and Social Progress.

Carter and Young's policy discussion touched on the growing divide between rich and poor nations, U.S. aid, the changing role of the United Nations, finding common ground between Christians and Muslims, free trade policies and the current administration. They reminisced about their early influences, and shared their visions for the future. Several of their anecdotes and rejoinders brought the audience to laughter. Throughout the month of April, the Andrew Young School hosted a variety of events to celebrate the Grand Opening of its new administration building in Five Points, the historic center of downtown Atlanta. The newly renovated building, constructed in the early 1900s, unites nearly all departments, centers and programs, faculty, staff and special student and lecture spaces at a single address for the first time since AYSPS was created.

“This is a very special day for us,” said Provost Ron Henry when he introduced Dean Roy Bahl at “A World View” symposium on April 13. “We’re celebrating the official opening of the Andrew Young School Building. It’s a great facility, we’re very proud of it. It has been a long time in coming and we’re very delighted that it’s here.”

The events surrounding this celebration are reported in this special insert in The Briefing. More information on every event is available online at www.andrewyoungschool.org. Enjoy!
